

I got into Harvard Business School with this "accidental discovery"... now it's your turn...

"How an $8 per Hour UPS Package Handler Got Accepted into Harvard Business School... Despite... Mediocre Grades and a Very Average Background!"

Only about 10% of all applicants get accepted to Harvard Business School. And until recently all but the top 20% of those accepted got in without an interview.

However, this average guy with a very average background got in... and... got in without an interview. (In fact, he was in the top 2% of all applicants.)

Here's how he did, and how you can do it too...

Dear Friend,

Is there one secret, above all else, that ensures you'll have a fighting chance, even an unfair advantage, in getting into Harvard Business School?

The answer is a resounding... YES! And I'm about to reveal it to you.

Here's what this is all about:

My name is Ryan Patterson and what I am about to reveal to you is THE SECRET to getting into Harvard Business School and turbo-charging your career FOREVER.

It's a story about the SECRET FORMULA a former UPS package handler with mediocre grades and an average background used to get into Harvard Business School... shocking his friends in the process.

This applicant did not go to an Ivy League school. He did not work for a major investment bank. He did not work for a major consulting firm.

He had a 2.9 GPA when he attended Idaho State University and started off his career as a $8/hour UPS package handler.

I did say he seemed average didn't I?

At the time, this applicant was not very familiar with Harvard Business School.

Yet, by sheer dumb luck he ended up following the same proven principles and strategies used by hundreds of other successful Harvard Business School applicants...
